WORKS IN PROGRESS

LEARNING CONSTITUTIONAL LAW (West, forthcoming 2027) (with Mark Alexander, Lou Bilonis, Tom McAfee, and Jessie Hill) (updated and extended, hardcover version of the soft-cover book published in 2024).

THE CIVIL RIGHTS CASES OF 1883: A SECOND DRED SCOTT? (University Press of Kansas, forthcoming 2026) (volume in the UPK Landmark Cases and American Society series).

“Both Parties Bidding”: The 1884 Ohio Civil Rights Act and the Fluidity of Political Alignments in the Aftermath of Federal Reconstruction (an essay exploring the history of the legislative adoption and judicial interpretation of the 1884 statute and that history’s relevance to broader issues of historical and constitutional significance) (invited presentation at the inaugural session of the Ohio Legal History Seminar -- cooperative effort between Ohio State faculty and the Ohio Supreme Court) (with Matthew Norman).

Constitutional Law from the Ground Up: How the Prohibition on “Under-ruling” Distorts the Judicial Function (arguing that the Agostini rule prohibiting lower courts from “under-ruling” Supreme Court precedents, the foundations of which have been undermined by intervening Supreme Court decisions not “directly controlling” on the precise point in issue, improperly frees both the High and lower courts from the fundamental judicial obligation to decide similar cases similarly and in accord with a stated rationale) (with Kimberly Breedon).

Bringing a Fork to a Gunfight: The Senate Acquittal on the Second Article of Impeachment and the Future of Congressional Oversight (an essay/short article exploring the tension between the D.C. Circuit’s panel opinion in McGahn and the rhetoric offered in support of acquittal on the second article in Trump’s first impeachment) (with Kim Breedon).

The Legal Significance and Practical Impact of Corrupt or Complicit Domestic Actors in International Informational Warfare (exploring the domestic and international law implications of target-state officials embrace of the claims made by a foreign disinformation campaign, using the examples of Lithuania, Poland, and the U.S.) (with Kim Breedon).
